Monthly Performance Review

King Tide was down -2.09% in NZDs (-0.76% in AUDs) in March. The blended benchmark was up marginally (+0.12%), and the NZD strengthened by 1.36%, which has the affect of reducing Australian based manager returns. Over the quarter, King Tide underperformed it’s benchmark by 2.2%, and the NZD strengthened by 4.0%. The range of manager returns in March were -10.5% to +5.3%. We had two managers in particular who disappointed. Both were negatively affected by exposure to gold stocks, and one in particular by an announcement from the Indonesian government regarding foreign ownership of resources. Both believe gold stocks are extremely undervalued. Our two best performing managers in March were NZ based. While they enjoyed a currency advantage, and were hedged against the falling AUD, they also benefited from their long only bias, and from excellent stock selection. The choppy markets are difficult to navigate for market neutral managers, of which we have two, and they have been among the worst performers this year. We had two managers close to new money in March. We are not displeased with the results in our first quarter. They are well within our range of expected outcomes. Active managers will not always beat the market over short periods of time, and when they do underperform, it will generally be in a strong market.
