Monthly Performance Review

King Tide fell -2.75% in May versus a fall of -5.75% for the blended benchmark of NZ and Australian equities. The ASX200, which makes up 90% of our benchmark fell -7.29% while the NZX50 was surprisingly resilient, falling just -1.90%. One theme which recurred in manager reports was the global search for income which perhaps explains why the NZ market held up so well. Seven of our nine managers materially outperformed the market in May, but the other two, both small holdings, fell heavily. One of these funds was hurt by its continuing bias towards the resources and commodity sectors, including coal, gold, copper, iron ore and energy. This runs in the face of the crowd, which have been dumping shares in this sector, driving prices lower. The other was a mixture of sector bias, (again in favour of the resource sectors), but also a result of profit taking in stocks which had outperformed leading in to May. An example cited by two of our managers was Cambell Brothers, which despite a record result and strong guidance, fell 15% in May. The net exposure of King Tide fell from 70% to 36% during the month as underlying managers reduced long exposure. Some are steering clear of commodity and resource based sectors, while others are staying the course, maintaining their positions. Funds under management grew to just over $9m in May.

King Tide's performance is expressed in NZ dollars, and currency fluctuations may significantly impact on the volatility of the fund. It is clear in our prospectus that we do not intend hedging currency, but investors may want to make their own hedging arrangements should they want to protect this investment from currency related volatility between the AUD and NZD. In the mid to longer term, we may offer a NZD unit, which would be hedged back into NZDs.
